An attitude of gratitude

When it comes to living a beautiful life, it's the little things that bring us the most joy; the tiny snapshots in time that end up becoming our most treasured gifts. If being grateful makes us happier and healthier, why do we take them so for granted?

As we head into the gifting season this Christmas, we want to inspire you to pause and consider how you're cultivating an attitude of gratitude for the people, things and experiences that make life extra wonderful. Let's look for ways in which we can celebrate all that we hold dear, and find every possible opportunity to fill each day with acts of giving, big and small – from a smile to a stranger to a favour for a friend, or a thoughtful parcel of their favourite cup of tea, let every moment be one in which we give the gift of gratitude.

It's not happiness that brings gratitude.
It's gratitude that brings happiness.

Gratitude is a natural ability; it exists within us always to have appreciation for the things in our lives, and it's this ability that enriches our lives and brings us the daily experience of joy. Your daily cup of tea can be the perfect place to start.
